National Insurance No Burden on Economy

But Law Should Be Amended to Cover Domestic and Unemployed

By EMMETT KAHN

THE month marks the first anniversary of the launching of the National Insurance Act.

Obviously, a single year is totally inadequate for drawing conclusions regarding the implementation of the Act or for venturing any definite opinion regarding the various difficulties that have been encountered. It is, however, possible to make it an integral part of the life of the community and the individual citizen. At the same time, the vital contribution it is capable of making is already beyond all question.

Each of the three existing types of insurance — Workers Compensation, Maternity and Old Age — has its own specific significance. Workers compensation is one of the basic and oldest forms of social insurance. Its importance in our own national insurance scheme is particularly great as it has now been transferred from a purely commercial to a more stable social basis.

Only social insurance can provide protection for the victims of work accidents, and for their widows and children when such an accident has had catastrophic consequences. The allocation of maternity grants constitutes a further step in providing for mothers continuing the arrangement properly made in this respect by Kuper and other health institutions.

The grant to every newborn child provides for the accommodation of the mother in a maternity home; of the total of ILAS granted, ILAS is allocated a lump sum of ILAS on the average; the balance, however, must be met by Kuper and other health institutions. The grant is not a mere handout, but a means of meeting the mother for the first year of the child's life. It is a contribution to the disburdenment of the mother and a contribution to the well-being of the child. It is a contribution to the
